Healthy communication is the key to positive family relationships. It sounds simple enough but let’s be honest: we don’t always make the time to sit down with our children and discuss the really important issues. If we are even more honest with our selves sometimes we just aren’t sure where to start and what to say.

Value of the Week is an exciting new initiative that helps to promote important discussions about the beliefs and virtues that we hold dear and we are lucky enough to be starting this program in 2015. This weekly online program encourages discussion around a number of important topics including the values of trust, honesty and respect.

In order for Value of the Week to be the most beneficial it is important that our families find a time during the busy week to join in on the discussions we will be having with your child at school. Value of the Week makes this easy for you to do as we have already started the conversations during class so your child is already familiar with the content. To make it even easier there is a weekly video that initiates the conversation with your child and an accompanying page that helps you to start the conversation.

The videos can be found by following these links:
- Our own personal remote control
- Persistence
- Respect

Once you have watched the videos use the discussion starter PDF to start you off as you talk through the ideas with your child:
- Our own personal remote control
- Persistence
- Respect

We are very excited to be starting Value of the Week as it provides a unifying link for homes and schools to have conversations about topics that help to create happier families and more productive classrooms.

Please join with us as we work together inspiring your child towards endless possibilities now and into the future.